

JUDGE ALONG

at the 77th H. V. V. H. State Fair

Dairy Goats

Content complements of Georgia National Fair

What a judge might look for in the female dairy goat:

- Strong dairy characteristics. Since dairy goats are raised for milk, which will be made into a wide variety of dairy products, the mammary system is especially important.
- A strongly attached udder that is elastic and well-balanced with adequate capacity to allow for heavy milk production over a long period of time.
- A relatively large body in proportion to the animal's size, age and stage of milk production. Prominent hips, thin thighs and a long neck.
- An angular (not round) and open body with a strong, yet refined, bone structure.
- An attractive framework with femininity, strength, upstandingness, length and smoothness of blending throughout that create an impressive style and graceful walk.

What a judge might look for in the show ring:

- Showmanship includes general appearance, especially cleanliness of the animal and the exhibitor's ability to lead and pose the animal in the ring.
- The goats are led around the ring and are kept between the exhibitor and the judges at all times.
- When the animal is standing still, its legs are positioned squarely under its body to show it to the best advantage.
- The exhibitor may stroke the goat's belly or rub its hips to keep the animal's topline straight.
- A good showman is polite and courteous to other exhibitors and pays attention to both the animal and to the judge at all times.
- You might see goats in the barns wearing "covers". These are to keep the animals clean prior to a show.

Did You Know? . . .

- A goat does not eat what you might think! Goats, like all domestic animals, need nutritious food, including grain and alfalfa to produce quality milk. Tin cans and other trash items are definitely not food for goats.
- "Nannies" and "billies" are only in fairy tails! The proper terms for adult goats are does and bucks.
- Some terms you might hear concerning dairy goats:

Doe: a female adult goat

Buck: a male adult goat

Kid: a young, immature goat, male or female
